attox Elementary School ents on April 9, in the auditorium, a pageant entitled story of Appomattox. More pupils will participate in the presentation which is being to commemoate the 97th anniversary of the termination here of War Between the States. The pageant, written and directed by Mrs. Belle Williams, is so that each class will present one scene as the narrator relates the story of the county.

The opening scene tells of the Indians of the area from which the county derived its name, and from Tidewater Virginia where as they moved westward Nebraska and thus the county received another name in Appomattox, Nebraska. This first was spelled until the latter part of the nineteenth century.

The scene, by Sweeney, the battle playing cards of the county, will be portrayed as will his mother. It is said that Joe and his two brothers called the first minstrel show. Sweeney played for Queen Victoria on one occasion and received a gold coin. This belt is now in a local resident, Duval Conner, and will be worn in the pageant.

Moving on in history, the war years are next portrayed with a scene showing Lee and Grant seated in the McLean House. There will also be a scene in which Wilbur McLean and his family are shown. Of interest to young viewers of the pageant, will be the retelling of the story of the rag doll which belonged to one the daughters of Wilmer McLean. The doll left behind in the parlor by the child, has been called the silent witness to the surrender. Today a replica of this rag doll is prominently displayed on the sofa in the restored McLean House.

Facts about industry and natural resources in the county will include references to manganese and bauxite found locally, as well as clay, which for many years was used in the manufacture of pipes for smoking.

The various businesses and industries will be mentioned with added action being called to them through the usage of placards and products carried by small children.

The final scene will be one in which the Confederate and United States flags will be erased with a large United States flag in front. "Uncle Sam" will stand beside the flag, depicting the reunited spirit of the nation.

All county residents are invited to attend this performance at the elementary school.

In connection with the commemoration of the surrender anniversary, 3 window shades have been painted for the school library windows. Three were done by Mrs. Virginia Mundy Cyrus, sixth grade teacher, and her student teacher, Winnie Ezell, of Longwood College. Each of these shades, whose pictures are seen from the outside of the building, have a different story to tell. One is picturing the Confederate states, another pictures the United States, and the third portrays Lee and Grant and the emblem of the United States.
